

Survivalist Sniper

Every Survivalist Needs “Sniper Training”

You may not be a state-sponsored covert assassin, but there are several reasons you SHOULD consider becoming a “sniper.”

1. Intelligence Gathering

As they say, “knowledge is power,” right?

- Sniper tactics are as much about doing reconnaissance to gain valuable intel on an “enemy” as they are about precision shooting.
- You must be selective in taking your shots.
- Being a “sniper” is all about identifying and confirming targets, skills that make you far more aware of when danger is afoot and most people don’t even know it.

2. Survival Hunting

In any kind of “collapse,” food shortages will hit within the first few days.

- You’ll have to find food for your family.
- You’ll only get one shot at that deer, rabbit, or squirrel that’s 300 feet away in a corn field. Your shots have to count or your family will go hungry.

3. “Next Level” Marksmanship

At long ranges, every tiny mistake makes a HUGE difference in how close your bullet hits to where you are aiming.

- Sight picture, breathing, trigger squeeze, and follow-through all matter... a LOT.
- Training to become “super accurate” as a sniper will help you fine tune ALL of your shooting skills, no matter what the gun.

4. Stealth And Concealment

A sniper’s success is not built on accuracy alone.

- You have to be “sneaky” to be a sniper.
- You have to be able to creep into an optimal position without being detected... even in urban areas.
- You have to be able to leave the “hot zone” without leaving a trail.
- These are all skills that will make you better at escape and evasion for survival, which comprises situations that will come up during a collapse scenario.

5. SHTF Defense

If things really do go to pieces and a collapse happens, your family’s defense will be up to you... and ONLY you.

- Staying safe while hunker3ed down requires you to stand watch for sneaky predators.
- The ability to engage an enemy from 500 to 800 yards out helps ensure your survival and will prompt predators to find easier targets to loot (if they are lucky enough to leave).

How To Get Started As A “Survival Sniper”

So what’s next?

- Buy a Remington 700 .308 caliber bolt-action, which makes a great “sniper” rifle.
- A FIXED variable scope is great for long-range shooting.
- Refer to www.AppleseedInfo.org for training.

Prepare. Train. Survive.
